

COUNCIL COMMUNICATION

TO: THE CITY COUNCIL

FROM: THE CITY MANAGER'S OFFICE

COUNCIL MEETING DATE: FEBRUARY 7, 1990

SUBJECT: ADOPTION OF UNIFORM CODES

INDICATED ACTION: Adopt the 1988 Uniform Building, Plumbing, Mechanical, Housing and Unsafe Building Codes, and the 1987 National Electric Code.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION: During the past year the State of California adopted the above named Codes. This action permits cities and counties to do likewise.

The new Codes contain minor modifications but none which will substantially change construction practices or increased costs. However, fees for permits will increase, because Lodi is currently using 1985 as the basis for its fees.

Allowable Area Increases—Section 506

The minimum requirement of the code insofar as siting a building is concerned is that it have access on at least one side to a street or yard. Thus it could extend completely between side property lines and to the rear property line and have access from only one side. It therefore follows that if a building is provided with yards or open space on two or more sides, some benefit should accrue based upon better access for the fire department. Also if the yards or streets are wide enough there will be a benefit due to the decreased exposure from adjoining properties.

Because of the beneficial aspects of open space adjacent to a building, the U.B.C. permits increases in the areas established from Section 505 based upon the number and width of the yards and streets around the building. In order for yards to be effective for use by the fire department it would be advisable they be connected to a public way so that the fire department will have access to that portion of the perimeter of the building which is adjacent to open space. However, the code does not require this connection. Also, the code requires (through definition of yard) that a yard be open, unoccupied and unobstructed from the ground to the sky. This definition precludes the storage of pallets, lumber, manufactured goods or any other objects which similarly obstruct the yard. However, automobile parking, low-profile landscaping, fire hydrants and similar features are permitted.

In the case where streets or yards adjoin two sides of the building, the code permits an increase in area up to 50 percent. Where streets or yards exist on three or four sides, the code for most occupancies and types of construction permits an area increase up to 100 percent.

Where access is available on four sides, the code does allow extra area increases for three cases where the amount of combustibles and, consequently, potential fire severity is relatively low. Also, the height of the building is limited to either one or two stories. In these three cases the area may be increased beyond 100 percent, provided, of course, the minimum width yard or street exceeds a width of 40 feet. This is based on the code criterion of permitting a rate of increase equal to five percent for each foot that the minimum width yard or street exceeds 20 feet.

There are many cases where very large undivided floor areas are required for efficient operation in such facilities as warehouses and industrial plants. The U.B.C. recognizes this necessity and allows unlimited areas for these uses under two different sets of circumstances.

The first case is for buildings up to a maximum of two stories in height of Group B and Group H, Division 5 Occupancies where the building is completely surrounded by streets or yards not less than 60 feet in width and protected throughout by an automatic fire-sprinkler system. The code assumes in this case that the amount of combustibles and, consequently, the potential fire severity is relatively low. In addition the protection provided by the automatic fire-sprinkler system plus the fire department access furnished by the 60-foot yards or streets surrounding the building reduce the potential fire severity to such a level that unlimited area is reasonable.

The second case involves a noncombustible building or a building of heavy-timber construction (Type IV) with noncombustible contents. The code assumes that a heavy-timber building provides somewhat comparable performance insofar as fire safety is concerned as a noncombustible building. This second case also requires that the building be surrounded by yards or streets with a minimum width of 60 feet.
